

This talk will give an introduction to teaching in St Andrews and some reflections on why it is generally successful. It will use examples from the School of Physics and Astronomy, though the insights are likely to be applicable across the sciences and beyond. Key factors are our environment, our students, our staff and our approaching to looking after our students. Supporting visual and conceptual learning of quantum mechanics